Laminated Glass

At first glance, a pane of laminated glass looks much like any other. Scrutiny reveals its functional design and protective capabilities.

Laminated glass performs. It is durable. It offers proven features that shield homeowners from interference by the outside world. Yet laminated glass is flexible enough to meet stringent architectural design requirements.

Using heat and pressure, a tough layer of polyvinyl butyral, or PVB, is bonded between two panes of annealed, tempered, or heat-strengthened glass. Depending upon the gauge of the glass, this technology helps protect homes and homeowners from intrusion, injury, and the sun's harmful rays.

of beauty and protection*

Bahamas Aluminium Manufacturing windows with Laminated Glass range from two to four times stronger than traditional windows. And, if the window should break, fragments tend to adhere to the PVB interlayer, reducing the number of flying shards and reducing the risk of injury from broken glass.

PVB interlayers are available in .030" gauge providing added safety protection, effectively reducing UV and sound penetration into the home.
